Capitalism Undermines Japanese Unity

Yasuhiro Nakasone with Ronald Reagan - championing a capitalism that will inevitably destroy the social fabric of Japan.

Capitalist corruption is rearing its ugly head in Japan to such a degree that many Japanese commentators are expressing grave concern. It was only a few years ago that former Prime Minister Tanaka and other high officials of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party were caught taking bribes from the Lockheed Corporation. Now former Prime Minister Nakasone, present Prime Minister Takeshita, and the three other most powerful men in the Liberal Democratic Party (which has been in power since 1955) have been implicated in Japan's latest stock scandal.

The LDP is run by political barons who each control a faction of the party loyal to himself. Yasuhiro Nakasone, Noboru Takeshita, Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, Shintaro Abe, and Michio Watanabe are the top party leaders. Each delegates responsibility for collecting funds for his faction to a "secretary". The power of the faction stems directly from the amount of money the faction is able to collect and dispose of.

In 1984 the Recruit Cosmos Co., a private real estate firm, offered to sell stock to seventy-five of the most important people in Japan. The secretaries for each of the above political barons bought stock which they were able to resell at a huge profit when the stock went public. Former ministers of agriculture, education, and defense also bought into the deal.

Japanese

From Page 1

None of the above is illegal, but it is so obviously a form of legal corruption that heads rolled when it hit the media. The chairman of Recruit, the well-connected Hiromasa Ezoe, resigned to "take responsibility" for the affair, but the scandal steamed on. The president of Nihon Keizai Shimbun, Japan's leading business newspaper also resigned when it came out that he was involved in the deal.

PLAUSIBLE DENIABILITY

The political barons all denied that they knew anything about the affair, blaming all on their secretaries, and claiming that what their aides did was legal anyway. But the normally supportive Japanese press was having none of that. There is now a very great state of unease about corruption amongst the elite. Major tax evasion cases are constantly in the headlines. Last year the most popular Japanese film was about the woes of a woman tax collector on the trail of a major fraud. Recently, members of the Prime Minister's staff were indicted for taking bribes from an ad agency. A member of the Diet (the parliament) was forced to resign earlier in the year for abuse of power. Police, school board officials, and corporate heads have all been caught within the last year with their hands in the till. An editorial in the Mainichi Shimbun newspaper lamented, "In the money oriented society that Japan has become, integrity and vigilance against the corrupting influence of money are beginning to fade."

STILL ESSENTIALLY SOUND

In fact, the Japanese social order is still essentially sound and has been so at least since the Meiji Restoration over a century ago. But continued corruption at the top, whether legal or illegal, will undermine and in the end destroy Japan's famous cohesion. Already there are complaints that the extraordinary inflation in real estate prices in recent years, especially around Tokyo, is causing a class consciousness to develop as the less well off are being forced to live in hovels. In the nationalist era prior to the Second World War and in the reconstruction era after the War, Japanese leaders went to great lengths to redistribute the wealth, and reduce class distinctions and class consciousness. But now it seems that the Japanese elite are being caught up in the capitalist ethic which measures a man's status by his wealth rather than by his service to the community. And status is particularly important in the Japanese ritualized social order, so how it is measured is critical to the development of the society.

In was, of course, inevitable that the capitalist economic system would undermine Japanese social unity and its intrinsic nationalism. What is surprising is that it took so long - an indication of the essential health of the social order during its nationalist era which carried over so long. The essence of capitalism is the self-interest ethic, and it clashes head on with the service and sacrifice ethic of nationalism. In the long term, one or the other has to give way. Either the capitalist economic system with its inevitable plutocracy is overthrown, or nationalism dies in Japan.

REVOLUTIONARY FORCES IN BEING

There are groups in Japan that recognize the danger, and they are surprisingly large considering the country's success and standard of living under its present system. The government estimates that there are 30,000 members of ultranationalist organizations (kokusuishugi) and most of these are racial nationalists (minzokushugi). That is about ten times the membership of racist organizations in America even though the U.S. is twice as large in population. Two of the largest are Issui-kai which advocates the complete overthrow of the present system, and Seicho no Ie which wants a "Showa Restoration" to return full authority to Emperor Hirohito (or his successor.) Every day groups of youths from these and other ultranationalist organizations ride through downtown Tokyo in their soundtrucks mounted with flags inveighing against Western materialism.

HUMPTY DUMPTY TEETERS ON THE WALL

In their greed and arrogance the patricians of Rome threw away the city's greatest resource and treasure - the loyalty of the plebian class. The patricians thought that their own ability, rather than the fundamental patriotism of the Roman working class was the secret of the city's extraordinary power. The patricians continually exploited the plebians until the latter refused to sacrifice and refused to fight. And then Rome was dependent on the good will of its multinational horde of mercenaries - a dependence that could not last long, and didn't. We will see if the Japanese patricians make the same mistake. Once a healthy social order is destroyed, it is almost impossible to piece it back together again. GG

National Democracy Versus Direct Democracy

Recently we received a letter from Don Streeter of Florida who is an advocate of direct democracy. We were beginning to think this an extinct breed, so we are glad that Mr. Streeter wrote us as the points he makes are important and should be addressed. He writes:

" I don't suppose you will print this article because it does not fully agree with your philosophy.... I agree 100% that that the present day American government is not a democracy and never was. This "representative form of government" was probably alright at first when the elected leaders were half-way honest, and with our nation being spread out as it was, with no radio or television or telephones, it probably was the only way possible.

But this soon changed when a few leaders found they could get their own pet projects passed, and make big bucks as well if they would pass another representative's bill, that is known as "I'll scratch your back if you scratch mine." And very soon our representative form of government became a corrupt disgrace, and it soon became a Capitalist form of government where the rich ruled for the rich and that is where we are today.

In Korea the North Koreans used to call us "capitalist pigs", and we would shout back at them that they were stupid and didn't know what democracy was. How foolish we were - how right they were. I don't know when it was that our government and educational system started telling Americans that we were a democracy. We have been brainwashed and lied to ever since.

You cannot blame the American people for being ignorant to the fact that we are not a democratic nation, when we have been taught that from the very beginning. Even our parents and grandparents were lied to and brainwashed and taught this. That is why it is so very important to re-educate as many Americans as soon as possible that we are not a democratic nation, but rather are a Capitalist nation.

I disagree with you as you prescribe to divide up America into many small nations. I still believe in Abe Lincoln's philosophy, "United we stand, divided we fall." I believe America should be one nation, strong and united and powerful with a true and pure form of democracy, where the majority of the people rule and make the laws, not some corrupt politicians. True and pure democracy is where the majority make all the laws and decisions by popular vote, from the lowest form of local government (town) to the highest form of government (county, state and federal). The politicians are elected by popular vote to enforce and protect the laws only.

In this way, no minority group or special interest group or the rich can bribe or corrupt any politician because they do not make the laws or decisions. The majority of the citizens decide and no private interest groups could afford to bribe 51% of all the citizens.... This is true and pure democracy, which I prescribe for all nations, not a dictatorship, one man rule as you have prescribed.

I do not believe in the two party system. It is a hoax to pull the wool over people's eyes, to cover up the corruption within. I believe in the popular vote, where the people decide, not some corrupt delegate who is paid off to vote or decide for you. That is not democracy.

I do not believe the president should appoint anyone ... each position should be decided by the people, by popular vote....

I do not believe in a dictatorship nation or government, or a one man rule as you prescribe. The people work, the people pay the taxes and support the government, then the people should rule. This is democracy.

I hope you would have the honesty and fairness to let all of your readers read this article and let them decide for themselves as to the form of government they would prefer, pure democracy, where the people rule, or your form of one man rule (dictatorship). What do you think?"

RACE AND POLITICS OF THE MAJORITY

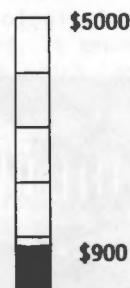

Mr. Streeter does not address the issue of race in his letter, unless he believes that since Whites are in the majority this solves the problem. But differential birthrates will cause Whites to become a minority in America in the next century. Moreover, block racial voting on the part of the colored minorities would destroy, even now, any chance of a White majority ruling in its own benefit because the Whites would be split on party and ideological lines whereas the coloreds would solidly support one force (as they do now with the Democratic Party).

But let us assume that race is out of the equation - that we have removed all other races from our nation. What then would be the best form of government to make our people great and powerful?

DELEGATION NOT REPRESENTATION?

Some political movements attack representative government, but then substitute another form of representation for the one they oppose. An example of this is Muammar Qaddafi's Green Movement which is supported by the National Front of Britain. To replace the parliamentary system the NF proposes a series of councils elected "by the people", i.e. residents elect delegates [they are not representatives you see] to street councils, and these delegates then elect area councils which elect county councils and so on up to the national council.

Obviously, this is a form of government hardly different from the parliamentary or congressional systems of representation now in force in Britain and America, respectively, and it would quickly degenerate into plutocracy as did the other two. This is not to say that a form of direct democracy is not now possible - in fact, modern technology makes it possible - but the Green Movement and the proposals of the NF are no such thing.

EXAMPLES OF ANTIQUITY

Ancient history is filled with examples of varied forms of direct democracy. Spartans for example elected dual kings in open meetings. To the pleasure of the Spartans, the two kings could rarely agree on anything and so very little changed.

Athenian direct democracy, on the other hand, was very volatile because the citizens of Athens met regularly to decide the most important matters of state. A politician who was popular with the Assembly one month could find himself executed, sometimes along with his wife and children, the next. The rule of the majority was alternately tolerant and tyrannical and was anything but pure, which is why we refer to this form of government as direct democracy rather than pure democracy. In Athens the rich paid demagogues and agents to do their dirty work. The persecution and execution of Socrates and the suppression of his school is, perhaps, the most infamous example of Athenian "purity."

Constant maneuvering for the backing of a very temporary majority made politicking in Athens a very dirty business. It also made consistency in political, economic and military policy an impossibility, which allowed a very mediocre Sparta to destroy Athens. Both city states were then conquered by brighter lights from the north - first Thebes, and then Macedonia led by the geniuses Philip and his son Alexander (who was educated by Aristotle of the School of Socrates - poetic justice for Athens.)

TECHNOLOGY AND DIRECT DEMOCRACY

Direct democracy was possible in the ancient city-states because the populations were small and concentrated. All of the citizens of the city could meet regularly in one arena to hear issues discussed and vote on resolutions advanced. Could anything like this be done today with our huge populations dispersed over vast areas? The answer is yes.

Political questions could be put to the people via television daily, or weekly, or monthly. And the people could vote, with some minor technical adaptations, on their televisions. They could be identified through their thumbprints as they vote in order to avoid fraud. The dialogue on a particular question would be carried on in the daily press and on the radio and TV networks before the vote came up. Thus, without leaving his home the citizen could participate in the direct ruling of the nation. Yes, it can be done, but should it be done? The NDF says no!

SPECIAL INTEREST ADVANTAGES

In the first place, there are serious structural problems that could put control back into the hands of the wealthy. For example, who decides what questions will be submitted to the people for a vote and how the resolutions will be worded? Whoever makes these decisions controls the fate of the nation. Let us say that resolutions are brought to the people only by initiative, i.e. a 100,000 signatures of registered voters would be required to put a question on the television ballot. This would certainly favor the rich and well-organized special interests who could pay thousands of workers to get out on the streets and collect signatures for the myriad of resolutions they want passed. They could inundate the electorate with special interest legislation (always disguised as something else of course.) On the other hand, if we had elected officials determine what goes on the ballot then we are back to representation and all its attendant evils.

Moreover, if we had the people electing all officials there simply would not be enough time in the day to do anything else but vote on the television. Can you imagine the people deciding who, for example, should be Under-Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs? On what basis would they choose? When would they have time to study the personnel files of all the prospective candidates? Who would decide who the prospective candidates are? And remember that there are thousands of such posts that have to be filled every year. The absurdity of such an idea should be readily apparent.

THE HEART OF THE PROBLEM

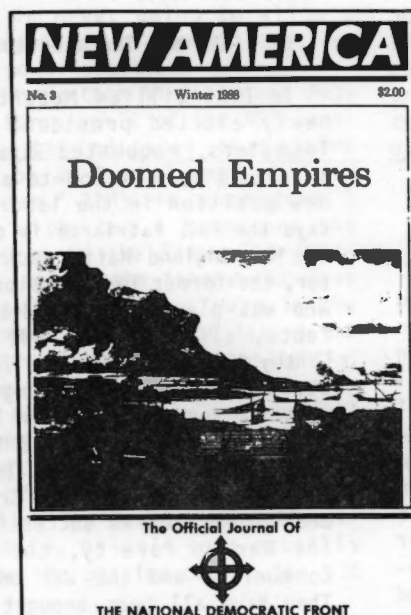

Now we are coming to the real problem with direct democracy which is the inability of the people to responsibly make concrete policy decisions. Few citizens have the time, knowledge or inclination to decide matters of national policy. Should our naval forces be engaged in the Persian Gulf? Seventy-five percent of Americans cannot locate the Persian Gulf on a map even though our sailors are dying there. Should the Federal Reserve System be in the hands of private banks or government banks? How many Americans even know that Federal Reserve Banks are privately owned, or even know what the System does or how it does it? Yet the Federal Reserve Board is probably the most important player in determining our national economic policy.

Policy made by direct vote of the people would be wildly erratic (as constantly changing public opinion polls would suggest), and it would reflect, at best, the mean intelligence of our people rather than the product of our greatest minds. Is this really what the people want? We do not think so. We believe that the people want to play an important if not decisive role in determining in what overall direction the nation should move, but they look to their leaders to get them to their ultimate objectives. The people recognize that they do not have the knowledge or technical understanding to make economic, military and political policy, and they rightfully look to their leaders to do this for them. That their present leaders have failed to make effective policy is

SHORT BURSTS

Down with Psychiatric Fraud

An article in the July issue of Science magazine says that psychiatrists and psychologists are no better at judging and predicting behavior than laymen, and courts should therefore consider excluding their testimonies on such matters. The authors, David Faust, Director of Psychology at Rhode Island Hospital and Jay Ziskin, a lawyer and psychologist, examined 1400 studies of how well psychological "experts" did in predicting whether suspects were likely to become insane or violent. "Studies on the prediction of violence are consistent: clinicians are wrong at least twice as often as they are correct," write the authors. In addition the study found that laymen do as well as clinicians even in diagnosis. In one case, for instance, secretaries performed as well as psychologists in selecting out brain-damaged applicants in preemployment tests. Another blow against one of the great psuedo-sciences of our age.

Can't Figure It Out?

A National Science Foundation study conducted in Montgomery County, Maryland on 28,000 public school students found that nearly half of the county's Black and Hispanic students cannot keep up with the standard math curriculum by the end of elementary school.

What is interesting about the study is that it admits that Black and Hispanic children do as well as Whites up until the third grade, which fact undermines environmental explanations for the phenomena. It also found that girls do as well as boys in math up until the last years in high school, and then things change. Even in those cases where boys and girls take the same courses throughout high school, boys do better on the math part of college entrance examinations.

"Educators said they could not pinpoint the causes for the disparities, speculating only that the causes could include lower expectations of black and Hispanic students, less preparation among minority group members before they begin school, or different views among female and minority students of their own abilities and future careers."

It is fun to watch them struggle in the web of lies they have constructed. The educators were leery to speculate because they knew that their speculations were obviously nonsense. Less preparation prior to school, low self-esteem and poor parenting would not wait until the third grade to manifest themselves in Blacks and Hispanics, or the 11th grade to manifest themselves in girls. Do you really believe that they cannot figure it out?

(remember folks, we are now engaged in hostilities in the Persian Gulf). The next time you read a public opinion poll on whether or not we should have our forces engaged in the Persian Gulf or some other part of the world, remember that the vast majority of those responding have no idea where in the world the place might be, let alone any knowledge of its strategic significance - or insignificance.

Why Americans Don't Vote

A new book by Frances Piven and Richard Cloward entitled Why Americans Don't Vote dispels the notion that the reason that most Americans don't vote is because they are happy with things as they are. Only 38% of eligible voters turn out for Congressional elections and 55% for presidential elections. A century ago 80% of the people voted in presidential elections. The authors found that those voting are the most well off. They write, "No one has satisfactorily explained why the 'politics of happiness' is so consistently concentrated among the least well off."

FBI Links New Teamster to Mafia

In 1984 William McCarthy, the newly elected president of the Teamsters, requested Raymond Patriarca's permission to accept a new position in the labor union, says the FBI. Patriarca is chief of the New England Mafia. Jackie Presser, the former Teamsters president who was playing both sides of the fence, also told the FBI of McCarthy's Mob connections. The Teamsters were the only large labor union to support Reagan in 1980 and 1984. Reagan, Meese and Presser were the best of buddies. Is it any surprise that the War on Crime has been prosecuted as successfully as the War on Poverty, the War on Communism, and the War on Drugs? They have all been brought to you by the same people - only their names change.

Geographical Ignorance

Americans aged 18 to 24 ranked last in an international comparison of geographical knowledge according to a study released by the National Geographic Society at the end of July. The Gallup Organization conducted the study for the Society. The U.S. was the only country whose young adults scored lower than its older adults which is a further indication of the collapse of education in America. The study found that 75% of all Americans could not locate the Persian Gulf on a map

LETTERS

Dear Racial Comrades,

I recently received the package containing issues of The Nationalist and the NDF Program for Democratic Nationalism and was very impressed by the professionalism and creativity with which the materials were formulated. The NDF manifesto is the best plan so far developed by the White Resistance forces. It includes all the various and infinite details that I have been struggling to compile in readable form for so long. It is indeed a praiseworthy accomplishment that should set a new standard for pro-White literature worldwide. Hopefully the various movements can follow the lead of the NDF and set some type of program for their individual goals, thus lending to an ever-strengthening White Resistance.

I have some questions, however, concerning the NDF's stand in regard to the attainment of political power and its economic policy: 1) How do you propose to gain power through the obviously anti-White capitalist electoral system? Most people will agree that the voters are not the real power behind the political machine; the controlling elite is never going to allow a fair election which might endanger their power position.

2) In Section VI (Economic Policy), Paragraph 2 of the NDF manifesto, it indicates that there would be an "annual graduated income tax." This is a program I agree with, but I have seen the same plan in the Communist Manifesto, and in the income tax laws of the Capitalists. There is the difference, however, of taxing the rich heavily and the poor lightly, but how does this policy provide for a total rejection and eventual elimination of capitalism and communism? Will we have to cling to some of the old ways in order to establish the Democratic Nationalist state, or will this actually advance the phasing out of the old ways?

3) If it came to the point where armed struggle would be necessary to defend our ever decreasing liberties, is there such a contingency plan for defensive action?

4) After the division of American soil among the various peoples, it is inevitable that the Black state, the multiracial state, and the Hispanic state will implode or stagnate to the point of chaos and self-destruction. The "refugees" from the ensuing anarchy would attempt to flood across our borders to become parasites living off our land of plenty. How would this be dealt with?

5) Are there any plans in the works concerning the division of the country, if so, what are they?

I'm sure the readers of The Nationalist would much appreciate it if these few questions could be cleared up. Once again, a thousand "thank yous" for your invaluable contributions to the White Resistance movement. This day and age we now live in certainly needs a new wave organization to lead us in the fight for White Nationalism, and the NDF is the one to lead.

Sincerely,
Jeremiah Standridge
Greenville, South Carolina

Editor - In answer to your questions: 1) A national revolutionary can never know when or in what form his opportunity to take power will appear. We must be ready for any eventuality. Hitler and Mussolini took power bloodlessly - Hitler through electoral success, and Mussolini through a march on Rome preceded by impressive victories in the voting booths. Even Lenin was able to take power bloodlessly by outmaneuvering the Mensheviks in the revolutionary parliament, and then he had to fight a bloody civil war to maintain control. Mao fought a 22 year military struggle to take power, but even so, he realized that politics comes first and that without a strong political base, a military victory is impossible. In our country Huey Long proved that a revolutionary message could win electoral victories. His program was radical redistribution of the wealth, and the powers that be were able to stop him only through assassination. (All these struggles are covered by our cadre reading list.) The controlling elite are self-interested, divided against themselves and inept. They will cause the collapse that gives us our chance, and we must be ready to exploit it. The key is the development of our cadre, particularly through study.

2) We must distinguish free enterprise from capitalism. Capitalism is the concentration of vast wealth in the hands of the few, who then use their money to dominate the political system. Free enterprise thrives best when competition is atomistic, i.e. when there are lots of little companies competing for the same market, rather than a few big companies dominating the market and fixing prices through both spoken and unspoken conspiracies (such as following a price leader). Free enterprise is thus antithetical to capitalism. We support free enterprise and oppose capitalism, and real free enterprise (i.e. atomistic competition) can only be attained through government intervention in the market place to reset the game every time it gets out of kilter.

The long-term unity of our people hinges on the attainment of social justice. We are determined that none live poorly and that none live too richly - that all our people live well and share in the plenty that our joint effort produces. This is achieved in our program through a combination of the graduated income tax, the full employment program, and the worker cooperative program. The synergism of these three elements will create a society of rough economic equality, and not until we achieve this state can we convince our people that we must judge a man not by his wealth, but by his service to the nation. Until then the rich will see themselves as superior to the rest, and they will seek out ever greater profit, power and prestige in order to dominate those "beneath" them. The masses will respond by emulating the avarice of their leaders, as they do now.

3) We do not advocate armed struggle because, at this time, we have no hope of victory through violence. We must bide our time, develop our organization, and review our options at each step of the struggle.

an indictment of the system that selects those leaders and dictates their responsibilities (or lack thereof.)

THE WAY OF NATIONAL DEMOCRACY

Under National Democracy political responsibilities are divided up into distinct spheres of control with very little overlapping. The people set the course for the nation by electing a national leader who has the power to act decisively.
The national leader then delegates power commensurate with responsibility to each of his subordinates, who then do the same for their subordinates on down the line, so that decisions are being made at the lowest level possible and with maximum initiative being exercised at each level.

When two officials (or a committee) are made responsible for accomplishing a task then no one is responsible. For example, who in the government is responsible for keeping spending within budget? Who is responsible for our present startling $2.6 trillion national debt? The President? The Congress?

Who in Congress? If you say every Congressman then you are saying no one, unless of course you are willing to do away with the whole body. Most voters are willing to blame every Congressman but their own, and that is what our corrupt politicians count on. This is why it is so important to avoid overlapping spheres of control (though there are some exceptions to this rule.) Each individual leader must take the blame or credit for whatever is or is not achieved within his sphere. This is the only route to effective government.

Under National Democracy political leaders are educated and trained to be political leaders through the Vanguard System outlined in New America No.2. No longer will we have lawyers, peanut farmers and actors running our government. The art of government is a specialty that requires many years of intense education and training. It is too important to be left to politicians. The time has come that we must have real political leaders at the helm. GG
